

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

John Wiester earned his bachelor's degree in geology and his master's in business administration from Stanford University. He currently owns and operates a cattle ranch in Buellton, California, having retired as president of Astro Industries, Inc., a producer of ultrahigh temperature scientific instruments for the nuclear and aerospace industries.

John is a member of the American Scientific Affiliation and its Committee for Integrity in Science Education, for which he was a co-author of the highly acclaimed booklet Teaching Science in a Climate of Controversy, which was sent out to most of the nation's high school biology teachers.

John is Instructor in Geology at Biola University and teaches origins at Westmont College.